

A New Beginning

“Adding a new scope” in the field of research related to plastic and reconstructive surgery is the result of the continuous “effort and vision” of our team. Our tributes to the Father of Ancient Plastic Surgery, Maharshi Sushruta.

With immense pleasure, we bring out the first issue of our journal, which is aimed at enhancing knowledge, sharing, and learning. Clinical Journal of Plastic & Reconstructive Surgery (CJPS) is a platform for addition to the knowledge of plastic and reconstructive surgery. The scope of plastic surgery is unlimited and hence addition of a new one is always beneficial. The journal has a vast platform to publish articles including general plastic surgery, reconstructive surgery, aesthetic and cosmetic surgery, craniofacial surgery, limb and hand surgery, genital surgery, microvascular surgery, super microsurgery, congenital anomalies etc. Our journal fulfills all standard criteria, including a double-blind peer review process, a strong editorial board and reviewer board, and easy online submission. Article processing charge is a great obstacle to publication in various reputed journals, and because of such a high charge, many articles are not published in specialty-specific journals. We are happy to share those publications in our journal is free of cost and without any article processing charge.

Members associated with the journal have put their sincere efforts into selecting topics from different spectrums, and opening and launching the journal. We are committed to produce a vast spectrum and good quality research and literature. We have strong faith in making this journal one of the most useful journals on plastic surgery. Our articles are not confined to any specific area or interest, our journal will be committed to include articles from all spectrums of plastic surgery for publication. Hence both authors and readers will get the benefits.
